NOTES TRACED TO HAUPTMANN ARE PROOF OF COMPLICITY OF AUTHOR IN MURDER

New Jersey Authorities Will Seek to Convince Jury That Tight-Lipped, 36-Year-Old Carpenter Wrote Lindbergh Ransom Notes

This is the fifth of a series of 12 articles on the forthcoming trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann in New Jersey in the Lindbergh baby murder case.

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1934, by International News Service)
FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 14—(INS)—In their efforts to send Bruno Richard Hauptmann to the electric chair for the murder of the Lindbergh baby, the New Jersey authorities will seek to convince the jury that the tight-lipped, 36-year-old carpenter wrote the Lindbergh ransom notes.

This, of course, Hauptmann denies. But when the trial, which opens here January 2, gets under way the 15 Lindbergh ransom notes and specimens of Hauptmann's penmanship will play an important part in the great legal drama.

The prosecution will place its chief reliance in Albert S. Osborn, noted handwriting expert, in its effort to show that Hauptmann's penmanship and the handwriting on the ransom notes are identical. The defense will produce at least one handwriting expert in an attempt to controvert Osborn's testimony.

Osborn, who has made a minute study of Hauptmann's handwriting, says it bears a striking similarity to the penmanship on the ransom notes. He gave testimony to this effect before two grand juries and before Supreme Court Justice Ernest E. L. Hammer during the Hauptmann extradition hearing in New York city.

"Absolutely overwhelming" were the words Osborn employed in describing the similarity in the writings. The prosecution argues that if Hauptmann wrote the ransom notes it means he virtually "confessed" the actual kidnapping by writing in the third note: "Why did you ignore our letter we left in the room?" (meaning the nursery).

The state also stresses the fact that Baby Lindbergh's sleeping suit had been sent to Dr. John ("Jafie") Condon, the Lindbergh intermediary, as proof that he was dealing with the kidnapers. Osborn gave a detailed explanation of why he is certain the ransom notes were written by the same hand that made out Hauptmann's application for motor vehicle licenses and that also wrote a promissory note of the prisoner's.

For example, there was the misspelling of the letter "h." In one of the applications Hauptmann had written the word "light" l-i-h-g-t. In one of the ransom notes the word "right" appeared r-i-h-g-t. In another ransom letter the word "the" was written h-t-e. The letter S in both the known handwriting of Hauptmann and in the ransom letters was similar, according to Osborn. There was an angular Y in both and the figure 2 and the A were alike in various documents he examined.

Osborn noted the use of a peculiar letter which he said he had never seen written by anybody. This was the letter X, made in a fashion much similar to the script double E. He said he found that letter three times in the ransom notes and on searching the motor vehicle applications of Hauptmann he discovered it again whenever the word "Bronx" appeared. He called specific attention to Hauptmann's capital D, as shown in the word "Dodge" on his license applications. He said the distinguishing mark of a D is the rounded right half but Hauptmann's "D" in "Dodge" was slim and Osborn found the same characteristics in various ransom notes beginning, "Dear Sir."

One point that all the letters had in common was, Osborn asserted, the failure to dot the letter I. Persons who never dot an I are "very, very scarce," he contends. The defense answer to the handwriting evidence to date consists of a cross examination of Osborn which in no way upset the handwriting expert's testimony and a denial by Hauptmann that he wrote the ransom letters.

Examination of the handwriting of Isidor Fisch, the friend of Hauptmann, now dead, whom Hauptmann claims left the ransom money in his safekeeping without telling him what it was, shows no similarity with the ransom notes. In fact, Fisch's penmanship was sharply dissimilar to that in the ransom notes. Friends of Fisch insist he (Fisch) had nothing whatever to do with the crime.

Tomorrow: Dr. John F. ("Jafie") Condon's part in the Lindbergh case.

BUCKS FARMERS IN SUIT OVER LAND TAKEN FOR ARSENAL

Group Charges Government's Sale of Tract Violated Pact

PROPERTY WAS SEIZED

Want Profits Government Is Alleged to Have Made On the Deal

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14—Bucks county farmers may find "pay dirt" in the land the Government refused to let them till back in 1918.

They will receive $1,300,000 if the U. S. Court of Claims sustains their contention that the Government violated its agreement with them when it forced them to vacate the land.

Richard H. Akers, a commissioner for the court, sat in the U. S. District Court here yesterday to hear the claims presented by Frank Harrigan, Bucks county attorney, representing the farmers. George F. Foley, attorney for the Government, came from Washington to fight the suit.

In the fall of 1918, the farmers, George A. Custer and Henry William Bibus, then living in Tullytown, were approached by Government officials. The official informed them and others living in the section the Government planned to build a munitions loading station on their land and they would have to vacate. The farmers protested. The Government, through condemnation proceedings, obtained possession. The farmers received about $300,000.

Before moving, however, the farmers claim, they received a promise the Government would never sell the land and would retain possession of it forever. With the signing of the Armistice plans for the plant were abandoned. The Government kept possession of the land until 1927. At that time a rich strata of gravel was found on it, and the land was sold to private interests of $1,620,000.

The farmers protested and entered suit in the U. S. District Court here to recover the profits the Government made on the deal. Federal Judge Oliver B. Dickinson refused to accept jurisdiction for the suit. The matter was carried to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. That court likewise ruled it had no jurisdiction.

Harrigan then carried the matter before Congress. As a result, Congress ordered the case referred to the Court of Claims. Commissioner Akers will hear further testimony in the suit today.

PUPILS ENJOY WIZARDRY IN LIQUID AIR EXHIBIT

Students at Langhorne High School Watch Water Boil, And Rubber Ball Shatter

PROPERTIES EXPLAINED

LANGHORNE, Dec. 14—James Elliot, a professional exhibitor and demonstrator of liquid air and the properties of materials at low temperatures, gave an example of his wizardry in the auditorium of Langhorne-Middleton high school, Wednesday morning.

Liquid air, Mr. Elliot explained, looks like ordinary water when poured from one container into another, although it is 314 degrees Fahrenheit below zero. So cold is this temperature that ice is to it like molten iron is to us. He put some in a tea kettle and showed how violently it boiled on a piece of ice. A rubber ball, though it bounced lightly and easily at first, shattered into tiny pieces like glass when it was dropped after having been submerged in liquid air.

"Metals are hard only when the molecules in them move very slowly. Lead is usually very soft," Mr. Elliot had two lead balls that rang with a dull thud. One ball was soaked two minutes in the liquid air and it rang in a clear resonant ring like a hard brass bell. A lead coil made of plain solder wire has no springiness at all ordinarily. One of these coils was tempered in liquid air. It then supported a heavy wooden block like a common screen door steel spring would. The lead spring was "heated" in cold water. When the block was again fastened to it, it stretched to the floor as springless as cotton.

An explosive made of absorbent cotton and liquid air was used in a cannon and blew a cannon ball across the auditorium. A small airplane was powered by a liquid air motor. Liquid air machinery needs no oil at all because the longer it runs the colder it gets.

The commercial use of liquid air is to obtain oxygen, nitrogen, and the ever present neon red for electric signs. The liquid air industry in the U. S. alone does over six millions of dollars of business a year.

Several other examples of what could almost be termed magic were given by Mr. Elliot. This is the first time any such exhibit has been given in the high school.

AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

New York American, December 9, 1934

Dr. Leo Wollman, intelligent, level-headed young man, and Nicholas Kelly and Richard L. Byrd are in Detroit to see that employees in the automobile industry have a chance "without fear of intimidation, to elect their own representative, to bargain with employers."

If this means that the automobile industry, through the power of the United States Government, is to be put in charge of organized labor leaders, the experiment will be interesting.

One or two facts should be stated. If union labor had controlled the automobile industry from the start, it would have forbidden and prevented mass production. An automobile that now costs seven hundred dollars would cost twenty-five hundred to three thousand dollars at least. Instead of twenty-four million automobiles running in the United States, there would be fewer than three millions. The automobile industry would not be employing one-fifth as many as it employs now, and automobile wages would be much lower than they are now.

FIREMEN AND RESIDENTS FIGHT BIG GRASS FIRE

Grass Fire at Oxford Valley Burns Over Huge Area

NO BUILDINGS BURNED

LANGHORNE, Dec. 14—Over 80 firemen and helpers responded to an alarm at 5:05 p. m. yesterday and fought a raging field fire at Oxford Valley.

The fire started at about 3 o'clock in the brush along the Pennsylvania Railroad. Fanned by a brisk north-west wind, the flames burned over 95 acres of grass and small trees on a part of nearly 3,000 yards.

High winds sent flames 10 and 15 feet in the air and made a real battle for the men who fought the blaze over three hours.

The property belongs to Alfred Moon who owns over 700 acres and nine farm houses at Oxford Valley. Langhorne Fire Company was the first organization on the scene, though it was held up four and one-half minutes by a freight train at Glen Lake.

DONATION OF FOOD IS ADMISSION TO SOCIAL

Groceries Given at Yardley Affair Will Be Used For Welfare Work

YOUNG FOLKS SPONSORS

YARDLEY, Dec. 14—The Young People's Society held a benefit social Wednesday evening in St. Andrew's parish house. The admission fee included a donation of food to be given to the welfare committee of Yardley for Christmas baskets. The affair was arranged by: James E. Groome, Jr., chairman; Mrs. Rose Cook, Miss Helen Wright, Arthur Blaker, and James Satterthwaite. The decorations were of pine and Christmas lights, and refreshments of cake and coffee were served.

Mrs. Oliver Wharton was honored on her 62nd birthday by a surprise party. Among the guests were: Mr. and Mrs. John Nay, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Allen, Mr. and Mrs. William Bearden and children, Homer, Dorothy, Caroline and Roy, Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. McGee and children, Raymond, Clarence, Bernice and Dolores, Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Guthrie and children, Ruth and Lauren, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Duerr and daughter Florence, Miss Mary Lingen, Miss Marion Oakley, John Groome, and Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Wharton. Mrs. Wharton received many gifts from her many friends.

An accident occurred on Tuesday afternoon near Woodside, when the car driven by J. Robert Hershey collided with a truck driven by Norman Worthington. The Hershey car, in which Mr. and Mrs. Hershey, Mrs. Walter L. Dilliplane, Mrs. Nelson Dilliplane and daughter Joy Mae, and Paul Brickelmaier, Sr., were riding, was proceeding toward Yardley when the accident occurred. Both cars were damaged, but no one was injured.

Mrs. Alfred A. Danser was hostess to the contract bridge club on Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Zebrowski, Jackson Heights, N. Y., have returned home after visiting Mr. and Mrs. John Alley.

Mrs. Harry K. Ambler will entertain members of the Altar Guild at a silver tea this evening.

N. G. DIRECTORS TO MEET

A business meeting of the directors of Bristol Branch, Needlework Guild of America, will occur at the home of the president, Mrs. Henry E. Ancker, Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. All directors are urged to be present.

JACK HORNER'S CHRISTMAS EXPLOIT IS RECALLED BY THE REV. GEORGE E. BOSWELL AS HE DELIVERS MESSAGE TO EXCHANGE CLUB AT ITS WEEKLY MEETING

Attitude Similar to That of Jack Horner is Taken by Many in the Present Age, Club Men Are Told—"Many Are Likely to Have Smug Feeling of How Good They Are"

Members of the Bristol Exchange Club, last night, listened to an interesting and inspiring address by the Rev. George M. Boswell, rector of St. James's Episcopal Church.

The address of Rev. Boswell dealt with the Christmas season, and was well received by the Exchangeites.

Rev. Boswell spoke as follows:

Mr. President and Members of the Exchange Club:

It is always stimulating to address a body of business men, and I have had the privilege of addressing you five or six times in the past. It is needless therefore for me to say that I deem this opportunity a precious privilege.

Time travels rapidly in its never ceasing journey, and soon again we shall have another Christmas season. Tonight I thought we might find interest in thinking of some aspects of the Christmas season, that we are very apt to overlook, for even Christmas with all of its joy and gladness, does bring with it certain obvious perils.

I have no intention of cataloging the most apparent dangers, such as overspending, or overexertion, or overeating, all three of which people freely indulge in. I am thinking to-night primarily of the temptation to over-complacency. That is to say against the Holy meanings and the rich significance of the festival season of Christmas, lies the very subtle hazard of vanity. Unless indeed we are exceedingly careful, the Christmas chimes will ring in, and the Christmas candles will reveal a very widespread feeling of Pharisaism.

All of us, of course, are thoroughly familiar with the old nursery jingle of Little Jack Horner, eating his Christmas pie, and that affords a vivid illustration of my meaning. I presume Jack Horner's Christmas exploit is more easily recalled by most of us more readily, than the great events of History. How, for motives all of his own, he took his place in a certain corner, where he would be quite undisturbed in eating his Christmas pie. With keen and eager enthusiasm he set himself about his holiday task. Of course his method of eating was quite primitive, thrusting his thumb into the pie, which could be readily excused, and then comes his cry of complete self approval, his acceptance as an adequate testimony to his goodness, the whole pie, more especially the plum which he so joyously extracted. He certainly did not put on any soft pedal, he boldly patted himself on the back.

It is quite possible that he was the good boy that he said he was despite of his bad manners. Jack Horner may have been the praiseworthy saint, that he claimed to be, but the inference which he drew from his pie, is a widespread peril, and particularly it is a Christmas peril. He drew out one plum, and said quite proudly, "What a good boy am I." By the same line of argument I presume two plums would have made him a very good boy, and three plums would have made him an Angel.

And is not that the attitude that a great many take in our present age. At Yuletide, because of its special joys

CHRISTMAS CAROLS WILL FEATURE CLUB CONCERT

8 Shopping Days To Christmas

and bounties, a great many become spiritually vain, and are likely to have the smug feeling of how good they are, especially if they happen to receive more than they have given, and unfortunately a great many Christmas gifts are given as a sort of bait, in order to get better gifts in return.

At Christmas we must have gracious and thankful hearts, and a joyousness that inspires others, and a reverent feeling to God who blesses the earth with Christmas, but certainly not the feeling that we are better and more righteous than others, because we have been more abundantly blessed. The recurrence of Christmas each year, ought to make us especially humble, and not conceited. One thinks of the ancient story of Moses leading the great nation of the Children of Israel up from the land of slavery to the promised land, and as they approached the land of their dreams and pilgrimhood, Moses warned his people, that it was not due to their righteousness, that God was giving them the promised land. Moses knew full well the human heart, in its self deceit as well as its splendid powers.

Indeed he himself was an example, for he had vainly puffed up his own soul with self praise, and he had to pay the penalty for his ruinous inflation. Because for a season, he forgot the real leader of the Children of Israel, Moses found the gate of an earthly paradise shut in his face. He was permitted to see, but not to enter the promised land. It is ever so in life.

And Moses' cry to his people, "not for thy righteousness," is a stirring warning against the common tendency to misinterpret the goodness of God, as a reward for personal or national virtue. And surely we will do well to think seriously about that warning.

America as a nation has been singularly blessed. Ever since our national birth, we have had riches and plenty, despite of the fact that some today lament our economic condition. In all our history, we have never had a famine, due to the shortage of crops. True there have been times, indeed we are passing through such a time at present, when people have been hungry, but hunger has not existed because our land failed to yield its increase. Any honest reflection makes all of us deeply conscious that America has been in reality, "a promised land," one which is rich in fruits of every kind, but it has not been because of our righteousness, as many dare to think, that we are thus blessed. There is grave peril in patting ourselves on the back too often, despite of a popular song which urges us to do so, and the surest road to National tragedy and decay is smug self complacency.

Little Jack Horner therefore, bespeaks a wealth of teaching for he emphasizes a peril that is particularly applicable to human life at Christmas. At no other season, save at Thanksgiving perhaps, are we more tempted to become individually and nationally conceited.

By some strange perversity of thought, most of our festival seasons of the year seem to point to vain glory and self complacency. At Easter for example, we are confronted with the vain glory of new clothes, on the fourth of July our minds are obsessed with the pomp of patriotism, at Thanksgiving we are apt to vain about our possessions and fruits of the earth, and at Christmas we have the pride of righteousness, the smug feeling that we are favorites of God, and that we must be pretty good citizens to be so richly blessed. As if at this joyous season, virtue was its own reward! That is the may many look upon this blessed season. Is it any wonder they miss Christmas?

Ah, Master Jack Horner in his familiar corner with his Christmas pie open before him, and a juicy plum in his fingers is a splendid revelation of our common danger. The Christmas pie and the Christmas plum. There is no other form of pride, which is so intoxicating and so far-reaching in its damaging effects as well as the pride of goodness, the vanity of self glory. It was by pride the Angels fell.

Why, then, do we have Christmas, with all of its gladness? Certainly mankind did not earn Christmas, nor indeed did mankind deserve it. Christmas was never intended to be a courtesy call of God in polite acknowledgement of many human visits at his door. We lose the real significance of it, if we think of it in terms of a reward for merit. Christmas is primarily a gift, and it is entirely beyond the range of bargaining and sale, or of earning and reward. Commercialism is an affront to Christmas, despite of the efforts of modern people to make it an affair of business. A gift always loses its gift-value if it is nothing more than a laborer's wage, or the equivalent for filial obedience. The gift value of a gift lays in its unearned or unmerited qualities. Christmas is the most inappropriate time to reward people for their merit. Christmas is a time for Love to declare itself; it is the season to bless others, whether they have been good or not. Christmas means that, or it means nothing at all.

JAPAN'S NAVAL PLANS

Viscount Admiral Saito, former premier of Japan, believes we do not understand his country when we think of her as desiring to inaugurate a naval race because she wants naval equality. What Japan wants, he says, is a new treaty to limit all naval armament to a strength based on protection to commerce and to coast line; to reduce the size of ships and guns to make them purely defensive.

We think most people who have followed what has been published about the naval discussions in London understand Viscount Saito's point of view. Moreover, we believe it is sincere. But what are the implications?

If Japan's recommendations were adopted, she would be left supreme in the Western Pacific. She could do as she pleased within a large area which included the coast of China; for Japan includes Formosa, and Formosa is only 100 miles from the southeastern mainland of China. A "defensive" fleet based on Formosa could easily become an offensive fleet against several Chinese ports. We have seen several instances of Japan's attitude toward China, and of her interpretation of treaties with China, and with other nations regarding China.

We do not believe for a moment that the responsible rulers of Japan fear she will be attacked by either the United States or Great Britain. We do not believe therefore, that Japan's object is to secure naval equality to protect her coasts and her cities against two nations that have renounced war as an instrument of national policy. But we do fear greatly that Japan wants to dominate the Western Pacific and get her own way in China, always on plausible grounds such as those she has adopted in the case of Manchukuo.

To put it plainly, we suspect that Japan has ulterior motives injurious to our commercial and financial interests in the Far East; we believe that Great Britain has the same suspicions; and we are fairly certain that as long as Japan's navy is inferior, she will not be tempted into dangerous experiments. Our reading of recent history may be incorrect, but it certainly is justifiable.

"DIXIE"

Sentimentalists who frequently cite "Dixie" as an instance of how lost causes tend to inspire great songs should be interested in the fact that the South's favorite anthem recently celebrated a seventy-fifth birthday.

"Dixie" was first sung on Sept. 19, 1859. The place was a theatre in New York. The author hailed from Mount Vernon, Ohio.

Hence, outside of the fact that Dixie was born before the war and that it was composed in the North by a Northerner, the notion that a lost cause inspired "Dixie" is substantially correct.

Oceans, it appears, are large bodies of water across which jingoes make war talk.

You must exercise prudence, foresight and thrift in order to pay taxes to support those who do not.

CHAPTER XXVII

That afternoon Spike went ashore and when he returned he looked more serious and business-like than usual. His greeting to Kay was a mere nod, as he hurried to Earl Harrow. The two men talked together for some time; then Spike went ashore again, drove away in the little car, and Harrow came out to speak to Kay.

"If it would interest you," Harrow said with a certain deadly pleasantness Kay had learned to recognize, "your Mr. Ryan is back in town."

"Pete?" she asked, trying hard to be astonished.

"Pete in person."

"Are you sure?" she asked curiously. "That seems strange. I'm sure he'd have looked me up."

"About his emotional life I can't say much, but he's an authority, but the fact does remain that he's in town and not in Guatemala. And he's been here a few days, too. Maybe he's just neglecting you deliberately. Young men in love do strange things, you know."

"I shouldn't think Pete would be that silly, though."

"No, I hadn't thought Pete would be silly, either," Harrow said. "He's a little more of a crack. I'm surprised, and darned if I'm not flattered, too. It would be worth it now to get tossed into jail."

"But that isn't what would happen to you," she said anxiously.

"What would?"

"I don't know, except that Mr. Harrow won't let the police have anything to do with this matter. He's really pretty hard when he wants to be, Pete, and so is Spike."

"They've got these two tough hoodlums with guns and they're likely to do anything. He's been furious ever since this business started. You might just be killed, Pete. Oh, don't smile like that. I'm telling you the truth. If you could have seen the way he whipped out that automatic the other night and shot at that man in the bushes."

"According to him, I did see it."

Pete said a bit nervously. "Well, the main thing is you came to warn me. I won't forget that, Kay. He drew her closer and held both her hands, looked deep into her eyes.

"Tell me, why did you come?"

"Pete asked, 'You must care a little about me?'"

"I—I—she faltered.

"They heard a car draw up in front of the house."

"That's probably them now!" Kay said. "Quick, Pete. Come with me. I've a cab down the alley."

"Thanks, no," he said, drawing away. "But you scout. It wouldn't do for you to be seen here."

"I won't go unless you come."

"Yes, you will," he said. He took her by the shoulders and rushed her out the back door, closed it and locked it quickly. Smiling through the glass, he waved at her and disappeared toward the front of the house. Kay peered around the side and saw the big car out in front. It was Harrow all right.

Kay didn't run. She stole around to the side of the house, concealed herself by a patch of bamboo and waited, listening. She heard the bell ring; heard Pete walk to the door.

"Pete Ryan?"

The voice was Harrow's, pleasant but not his usual tone.

"Yes," she heard Pete say.

"My name's Harrow, Earl Harrow."

"Yes, I know."

"I'd like to have a talk with you."

"Come in, then. There's nobody here. The people who own the house are out of town. Make yourself at home."

She heard Harrow say: "Thanks, Cigarette!"

"No, thanks. I'll light my pipe."

There were no other voices and there was no sound of other visitors with Harrow; evidently Kelly, Wagner and Spike, or whoever had accompanied him, were waiting outside.

"I've heard a lot about you, Ryan," Harrow said. "Feel as if I know you."

"I've heard a lot about you," Pete rejoined.

"So?"

There was a pause, then she heard Harrow again:

"Getting straight to the point, what I want to talk to you about is a little matter that may have something to do with that cut on your cheek."

"That?" Pete said, easily. "How Naturally I ducked. And when he'd gone I sneaked around to leave by the next yard. You must have seen me then."

"I was standing in the hall, looking out," she said. "I just happened to see it. And it was dark. You couldn't see me."

"Well, that's my story," Pete said. "You can't hang me for that. And you can believe me or not, I wasn't the man in the yard the other night."

The first I knew there was one was who you told me."

He could see that her eyes were still fixed curiously on his cheek. He chuckled again.

"In New Orleans," he said, "I got to wandering around the way a tourist will. Only I wasn't careful where I went or when. A fellow got pushing me around one night when I was walking through Remy-part street and he must have had a ring with teeth in it. That's what that is."

"I'm glad," Kay said.

"But you don't believe me, do you?"

"Even if I did or didn't, it wouldn't matter. The thing for you to do is to get out of town."

"I'm surprised the interest you're taking," Pete said. "Now—wait! That wasn't supposed to be a crack. I am surprised. And darned if I'm not flattered, too. It would be worth it now to get tossed into jail."

"But that isn't what would happen to you," she said anxiously.

"What would?"

"I don't know, except that Mr. Harrow won't let the police have anything to do with this matter. He's really pretty hard when he wants to be, Pete, and so is Spike."

There were no other voices and there was no sound of other visitors with Harrow; evidently Kelly, Wagner and Spike, or whoever had accompanied him, were waiting outside.

"I've heard a lot about you," Pete rejoined.

"So?"

There was a pause, then she heard Harrow again:

"Getting straight to the point, what I want to talk to you about is a little matter that may have something to do with that cut on your cheek."

"That?" Pete said, easily. "How so? You don't know the man I got it from, do you? Because if you do, I'd just like to have one good look at his ring."

"Somebody hit you?"

"Yes. Over in New Orleans. A drunk. Just a little street brawl I couldn't get out of. I should have had more sense."

There was another pause. Then Pete's voice:

"But what's that to do with you? I'm glad to meet you at all that about I've got plenty of time, but I still don't see what this is all about."

Another pause. Then Harrow:

"All right. Well, there's been a little funny business going on. They tried to tell me you were back and might be mixed up in it. I found that hard to believe after the glowing reports my secretary had given me about you in the past, but I just thought I'd stop by. No offense or anything like that. Sorry not to be more explicit, but my business has to remain my business, just as yours does yours, I suppose. You'll pardon me, I hope?"

She heard the sound of a chair being shifted and presumed Harrow was rising.

"Well, of course," Pete said, "it is a little funny, you'll have to admit."

"Of course," Harrow admitted pleasantly.

"Going to be in town long?" Pete asked.

"Not long," Harrow said. "You understood you were on your way to Guatemala?"

"I am. Yes, I'll be here till the 25th or 26th. Why?"

"No special reason. Except that there are a couple of gunmen out in that car. See them? They'll be here as long as I am—around and about. If for any reason you want to come see me, you ought to know about them. They're a little touchy and if their nerves were on edge, you can't tell what they'd do. Mind you, I don't say they go about shooting people, but I just thought I'd let you know so that if one of these days you found out anything that might interest me you'd remember to make an appointment in advance because it's a little hard for people to drop in on me unexpectedly anymore. Well, goodbye, Ryan. Sorry to have bothered you."

"You haven't bothered me," Pete offered.

"Sorry, anyway," Harrow said.

And Kay heard the two men walk to the front door, heard the screen open and close again.

She had waited long enough; too long, perhaps. So she ran down the alley, climbed into her cab and ordered the driver to hurry across the river. Leaving the cab, she went into two Beach street variety stores and made a few small purchases, then returned to the yacht with the packages under her arms.

Harrow was there when she went aboard. "Shopping?" he asked.

"Just a few things I'll need on the cruise."

That evening, after dinner, Harrow asked her:

"How well do you like this Pete Ryan?"

"Pete? Why, I don't know. What makes you ask that?"

"Because I'm having him watched, and he might accidentally find himself in jail."

"Why, what has he done? He certainly wasn't the man you shot at the other night."

"I wouldn't be so sure. One way or the other. But I've been thinking it over and I have a feeling that the cruise might be happier and safer if we took all possible precautions. That's just one."

"But if he hasn't done anything, how could he be put in jail?"

Harrow smiled as if she were a child. "Everybody who finds himself in jail for a little while hasn't done something—necessarily. It's just possible that he might be held on some charge until after we left."

"But that's underhanded."

"A lot of things are underhanded

Entertain At Dinner On 50th Wedding Anniversary

SOUTH LANGHORNE, Dec. 14.—Marking 50 years of married life, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Gregg celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last evening.

The celebration took the form of a turkey dinner, and a social period during the evening.

For the dinner covers were placed for: Mr. and Mrs. Gregg, Mr. and Mrs. James Connelly and sons, South Langhorne; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Turner, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. George Buchanan and son, Lansdowne; Mrs. Ida Carpenter, Clifton Heights, Pa.; and George LeCompte, Hulmeville.

Later in the evening a number of additional guests gathered, this feature being a complete surprise to the honored hosts. These guests included: Mr. and Mrs. C. Wesley Haefner, and Mrs. E. S. Huntsman, Hulmeville; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Riley, Philadelphia; the Rev. and Mrs. W. S. Heist, Southampton; Mrs. Andrew Clothier, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Wessaw, Mrs. Valentine Stockert, Mrs. Frank Veit, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bilger, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Herter, South Langhorne.
The bride and groom of 50 years ago were presented with numerous gifts, including bouquets of flowers, money, and miscellaneous items. The dinner table was attractive in decorations of gold. Music and a general social time were much enjoyed.

Mr. Gregg and wife, the former Miss Laura MacDonald, were wed in Elkton, Md., where they resided in 1884. They came to this borough 35 years ago, and now reside at Hulmeville and Crescent avenues. They have three daughters, Mrs. Edward Turner, Philadelphia; Mrs. James Connelly, South Langhorne; and Mrs. George Buchanan, Lansdowne.

Funds to pay for the operations were raised by Manoah R. Reiter, supervising principal of the schools, and Dr. George A. Enion, the school physician, by contributions. It was reported that Dr. Victor B. Elin and Miss Laura Koch, the community nurse, had assisted with the operations.

Miss Koch, in her report, showed that she made 208 visits during the month, with 38 free patients and the others part pay. She made 14 social service visits and had 59 interviews. She also made 44 school visits. She attended 38 non-communicable disease cases, one tuberculosis and 33 maternity cases.

Jack Horner's Christmas Exploit Is Recalled By The Rev. G. E. Boswell

Little Jack Horner had his logic reversed. The plum in his Christmas pie was not a reward for his being a good boy, it was rather a spur to help him be a good boy, and it seems to me, if we are to catch the real meaning of Christmas, we too, shall have to reverse our logic, and think of Christmas with its joy, and think also of our countless numbers of privileges, as an incentive, rather than as a reward.

Between incentive and reward, of course, is a great gulf, a gulf which is particularly hard to cross in this age of cold commercialism. It is tragic enough for one to sell his time and his talents, but to put a price upon one's goodness is almost unthinkable. Christmas joys can never be mere wages for our righteousness. Christmas after all is the fertile seed of the Harvest, and the sun and the shower as well. It comes to all, it is like the gentle rain from Heaven that falls on the just and the unjust alike. Christmas in our own lives therefore should be the seed of harvests of new life and of new endeavors; an incentive and at its best should mean the very atmosphere in which manly efforts and courageous living comes to fruition and harvest.

We live in a land of plenty, a land where our all important and pressing problem is not Production but rather Distribution. I was somewhat taken aback when I noticed last week, the latest statistics released by the Government which revealed the astounding fact that if all the present machinery in America was used for production, we could produce enough to give every head of a family the equivalent of $4,200 in goods each year, and furthermore production could be stepped up with new machinery to give everyone from eight to ten thousand dollars a year in goods. These statistics may not mean much, but certainly none can deny that we live in a land of plenty. Our national blessings are not a reward because of our righteousness, but surely they ought to be a spur to each of us to be worth-while citizens.

The Love of the Creator, always outweighs any possible deserving on the part of those created. That is a truth we so often overlook, and because we do, Christmas loses its real and its only true meaning. Perhaps our Christmas pie may not have in it as many plums this year as it has had in the past, but surely it ought to set us thinking. We are confronted nationally and individually with big problems, for despite of our plenty, there are those who are hungry, despite of our ability to produce there are no markets for what we produce. Our whole economic system must be wrong somewhere, there must be changes wrought if we are to emerge from chaos and confusion.

If therefore the rich bounty of this Christmas, and all of us are rich when we compare ourselves with others, if the joy which permeates this old world at this happy season, sets us to serious thinking, if our own individual blessings are an incentive to us to less selfish living, then indeed Christmas will not have come in vain.

The great peril of Christmas is self complacency, self conceit, hypocritical pride in our own goodness; but the joy of Christmas, is renewed endeavors and renewed consecrations, by which we will bloom and flower in the service of mankind.

Our Christmas pie will taste better if we all remember the spirit of the Pilgrim's Grace, with which I shall close:

Give me a good digestion, Lord,
And also something to digest;
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
With sense to keep it at its best.
Give me a healthy mind, good Lord,
To keep the pure and good in sight;
Which, seeing sin, is not appalled.

But find a way to set it right.

Give me a mind that is not bored,
That does not whimper, whine or sigh;
That does not whimper, whine or sigh;
Don't let me worry overmuch,
About the fussy thing called "I";
Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me grace to see a joke;
To get some happiness from life
And pass it on to other folk.

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS
TRY SKILL AT SOCCER

Helen O. Mankin writes as follows in the Philadelphia Bulletin:

Two hundred and fifty-five co-eds are taking part in the inter-class soccer tournament this week at Bristol High School.

Six freshman teams, three from the sophomore class, two from the juniors, one from the seniors and five from the junior high grades are competing for the plaque that Coach Margaret Pope says will go to the winning squad.

"I know it's cold outdoors these days," she commented, "but it's all voluntary and the girls don't seem to mind Jack Frost. They had so much fun when they learned soccer this fall instead of having hockey, we decided to give them some competition."

"We are so fond of soccer we would love to meet another school in an inter-scholastic game. There is one thing to be said in favor of soccer, very little equipment is needed, just a field and a ball."

Miss Pope is new at Bristol High. She is young, attractive, enthusiastic and smiling. She knows just what Bristol High girls like because not so long ago she was an athlete there herself. She played forward on the basketball team and was one of the track stars. She is a Temple graduate.

Miss Pope has a number of modern ideas. She and the girls are happy over the new suits ordered for the basketball team. They have gray washable blouses and abbreviated cherry red pants. They are expected to be ready in time for the opening game January 4 with the alumnae.

"I'm glad the girls can have those lovely new suits," said she. "They don't know how lucky they are." Then she dug deep into a chest in her office, and remarked, "Look at this heavy, cumbersome gray middle blouse with its long sleeves—weighs a ton. That's the blouse I wore when I played for Bristol High."

Peggy Morrell and Mildred Faber are the only regular varsity players left from last season when most of the games were chalked up in the win column. Miss Pope is not the slightest bit dismayed at the vacancies in the line-up, for 100 girls came out to practice.

Peggy Morrell is expected to be the star. She played side center for three years but has been shifted to forward and although sturdy and not very tall, is quick. Mildred Faber is a guard.

Several who played on the varsity squad last winter and a large percentage of freshmen, make up the present varsity group. Those who have been dropped will play inter-class games later.

The squad includes, Pauline Napoli, Elizabeth Bellerby, Ruth Jeffries, Peggy Phipps, Palma Salvati, Phyllis Wichser, Marie Russo, Janice Jeffries and Ida Fioravanti, forwards. Centers are Arline Woolman, Alberta Larzelere, Bernice Bruner, Fannie Tisone, Ethel Keers, Mary Robert, Mary Ann Duffy, Mary Smoyer, Mollie Wright and Anna Keers, who will play either side or jump.

The guards take in Margaret LeCompte, Eleanor Ridge, Eleanor Dyer, Elizabeth Mariner, Dorothy Mulholland, Grace Bono, Therese Singer, Betty McElroy and Louise Smoyer.

The captains of the soccer teams are, Olive Winslow, Thelma Johnson, Wilhelmina Beatty, Anna Ellis and Mary Yates, of the junior high, and Mollie Wright, Janice Jeffries, Anna Keers, Pauline Accardi, Mary Eckert and Margaret Phipps, of the freshman.

The upper class leaders are: Anna Hoffman, Nan Townsend and Betty Boswick, sophomores; Evelyn Stephenson and Phyllis Wichser, juniors, and Louise Smoyer, senior. Evelyn Stephenson will not be able to play again as she is in the Episcopal Hospital for a mastoid operation.

Manager Ethel Snyder has arranged for Bristol co-eds to play Morrisville, Southampton, Bensalem High and has tentative dates set with Olney and Abington basketweavers.

CITY OF DENVER SOON TO BE CONCENTRATION POINT OF GREATER PART OF THE GOVERNMENT'S BULLION, WHICH IS LARGEST STORE IN WORLD

San Francisco Hoard Taken To the Colorado City, and Gold Stocks from Philadelphia and New York Will Follow Soon—Elaborate System of Protection Developed About the Plant

By MICHAEL F. DACEY

International News Service Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1934, by International News Service)

DENVER, Dec. 14.—(INS)—Denver, far removed from coasts which an enemy nation might invade, soon will be the concentration point of most of the government's bullion, now the largest store of gold in the world, it is indicated.

Officials have broadly hinted that a protective measures were "learned by removal of gold stocks now held in New York and Philadelphia will follow, soon after the first of the year, the transportation of the San Francisco hoard to Denver. No official admissions are expected to be made.

The elaborate system of protection developed around the Denver mint, the new repository for the symbol of the nation's wealth, includes safeguards against seizure of the treasure by invaders.

Electric rays, poison gas, and the latest automatic photography devices now are part of the defensive equipment of the United States mint here. One piece of photographic equipment is a camera that snaps a picture of every person who steps before the window where gold is bought.

Magnetic detectors are employed that reveal the presence of any weapon on the person of any visitor. These were one of the devices worked out by mechanical and electrical experts sent here to make a careful survey and recommend extensive protective measures at the building which already houses more than $2,000,000,000 of the yellow metal. Though their visit was secret, some details of the protective measures were "learned by removal of gold stocks now held in New York and Philadelphia will follow, soon after the first of the year, the transportation of the San Francisco hoard to Denver. No official admissions are expected to be made.

On these automatically released poison gas upon anyone having the temerity to try to sink a bit or drill into the walls of the mint vaults.

Another contrivance flashes an alarm at a central switchboard within the mint every time a person, car or other object comes within a few feet of the building. This device, recently perfected for prisons, surrounds a building with invisible lines of electric force. The instant the lines are cut by an object, a light flashes on the switchboard showing just the point at which the building is being approached.

The detector device rings an alarm if any person being admitted to the mint building has a gun or other concealed steel object. These detectors are so accurate that they would disclose the presence of so small a piece of metal as a nail file.

The huge stores of gold being brought to Denver prompted new efforts to protect the mint adequately against any possibility of theft or even seizure by foreign enemies.

This much was indicated by the recent visit here of Mrs. Nellie Tayloe

Ross, director of the United States mints, and W. C. Cram, Jr., assistant to the secretary of the treasury. Following their conference with Mark Skinner, superintendent of the Denver mint, guarded admissions were made of developments.

Official confirmation is lacking for stories concerning removal of an additional $8,000,000,000 in gold from the east to join the $2,000,000,000 already in the Denver vaults. The bulk of the latter amount was transferred from the San Francisco mint. Additional gold arrivals are to be reaching here from federal reserve banks throughout the country.

The greater security offered by Denver's isolated location, far from sea or foreign boundaries, is declared to have motivated the removal of the gold here. In doing so the government is emulating France, which has its entire store of $4,000,000,000 worth of gold locked in vaults far beneath the bottom of a lake, where they could be flooded instantly upon the approach of an enemy.

The huge shipment of gold from San Francisco, estimated to have totaled 2,375 tons, was made over a period of 10 weeks, with special trains containing three or four mail cars each arriving on regular semi-weekly schedules. A total of 97 cars were used, or enough to make a single train nearly a mile long.

Each gold train was protected by 32 men and two officers of the regular army. In addition, postoffice inspectors, secret service men and local police here and in San Francisco guarded the loading and unloading of the shipments.

Because of the immensity of the gold shipments from the coast, no effort was made to keep the time of arrival here of the early shipments secret. Motorcycle police and detectives in automobiles accompanied the mail trucks from the railroad yards to the mint, with sirens shrieking, and traffic held back while the procession was passing.

Later shipments of small amounts of gold from reserve banks are secret. They travel by regular trains.

WHY ANGLERS "CARP"

PRAGUE — (INS) — The Fishermen's Club at Svata Hora, spent a large sum last year in stocking the local pond with carp. This year they expected some good sport. On the day of the angling competition, many people came from the surrounding villages to look on.

But the total catch for the day was: Two dead cats, three old boots, and a carpet weighing less than two ounces.

The carp with which the pond had been stocked had been washed out by floods.

Edward Riley, Philadelphia, spent the week-end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Grace, Jefferson avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Frank McElroy and sons, Frank, William and Edward, Jersey City, N. J., were Sunday guests of Mrs. Ellen Gallagher, Pine street, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Gallagher, Buckley street.

Season Naturally Creates A Feeling of Great Human Interest

DATES HAVE CHANGED

By G. Bertram Regar

The Yuletide season quite naturally creates a feeling of human interest in all mankind, and further stimulates the spirit of good-cheer among many who, ordinarily throughout the rest of the year, do not give much thought to others.

Christmas Day is observed in every Christian Country throughout the entire world. As the actual date of the Nativity was unknown, various days were celebrated up to the fifth century, when the early Christians gradually settled upon December 25 as a fast day in honor of this event. The reason for this date seems to be the veneration in which the ancient people held the season of the winter solstice, because this is the turning point of the year, the lengthening of the days and the season of more light.

Our Christmas customs of today are the contributions of people of many lands. The Druids would propitiate their sylvan deities by hanging mistletoe over the entrance of their homes—and we all know the pretty custom which grew up from that.

It has been quite customary within the home to create an atmosphere emblematic of the season. The traditional English Yule log originated in Scandinavia, where in Baronial Halls it blazed a welcome to the high and to the low. The great Yule candle was the forerunner of our own Christmas lighting.

Holly has taken an important place in Christmas decorations, and it may be of interest to know that "Holly" is a derivation of "Holi" as the branches and berries were used from earliest days to decorate churches at Christmas-tide, thus giving significance to those emblematic colors of Christmas, red and green.

The people of other nations used other forms of decoration, as for instance, the Romans lighted and decorated evergreens in their Saturnalia. The Druids introduced this custom into Germany, where it was first adapted to the Christmas festival. Germany today still observes the feast of St. Nicholas, who is supposed to have died in December sometime during the fifth century. This name was corrupted by the Teutons and Santa Claus became synonymous with Christmas in countless homes. There also comes from Germany another derivation—Kris Kingle, strangely changed from Christ Kindeln meaning little Christ Child. The origin of this is lost, as Kris Kingle is depicted, like Santa Claus, as a jolly bearded, red-faced man.

The Christmas legend of the Wise Men watching their flocks by night, and following the Star of Bethlehem, has lived through centuries and been observed by various people in quaint customs of celebration—those of fasting and prayer—of the Yule log and feasts in the banquet hall—of joy in the home and of social pleasure—the story of children and of Santa Claus, a story becoming more wonderful with each passing year, as a violin becomes sweeter for the melodies it has sung. All in commemoration of the birth of Christ, being told throughout the length and breadth of the nation today in Christmas lights.

Within the past ten years, there has been a steadily increased use of exterior holiday decorations, and the use of brightly colored electric lamps scintillating and spreading a warm glow of the Christmas spirit.

Merchants decorate streets and their places of business, reflecting the happiness of the Christmas shoppers.

At our homes, light and color transform even the most modest into places of splendor and beauty. The use of Christmas candles and wreath in the window, of ropes of greens and colored lights festooned along the eaves; of evergreen, spruce and fir on the lawn, sparkling with tinsel and colored lights, of evergreen branches and wreaths over the door—each and all call forth a warm cheerful Merry Christmas to the world as it passes by. A Christmas greeting that quickens the pulse and warms the heart with the joy of living! Even a candle in the window of the smallest home spreads a welcome to the homeliner.

Communities are lighting giant trees with thousands of warm, glowing lights, about which little boys and girls shout with glee and laughter. Men stand with heads uncovered and with tender hearts, while on the glowing cheeks of women sparkles a tear of joy, and happiness and love, and how deeply impressive is the figure of an old man, poorly clad, stepping out of the crowd into the flood of light about the tree. He stands for a moment in awe and admiration, reaching out and reverently touches a branch, passing on with a reminiscent smile of happiness, seeing in the mists before his eyes a little boy and another tree in years gone by.

The Community tree is everybody's Christmas, bringing cheer and gladness into thousands of hearts, many that ache with loneliness, many that yearn for the loving longer present. Christmas lights! You can feel their warmth and glow reflected in the smiling faces and glistening eyes of those who pass them by. There is a hush of expectancy! Bells ringing out the carols of old. From every illuminated home and building a warm, happy colorful "Merry Christmas" flashes to the world in—Christmas Lights!

THE COBRA'S REVENGE

COLOMBO, Ceylon — (INS) — Two schoolboys were on their way to school when they noticed a cobra trying to swallow a hare. One of the boys held the cobra down with a long stick while the other daringly snatched the hare free. Then they continued on their way to school. As they were returning home some hours later the cobra, as if waiting for them, rushed into the road and struck one of them several times. The boy was carried home dying.

MARYLAND MAN LISTS UNSEASONABLE SNOWS

Such Are Recorded Several Times During Latter Part of May.

RECALLS DROUGHTS

William Thorne, of Salisbury township, Lancaster county, has compiled a list of unseasonable snows, as follows:

1774—Several inches May 3rd.
1803—Rye in bloom crushed flat in the ground, ruined May 8th.
1816—Many snowfalls in June, the "Summerless year."

1819—Deep and drifting snow on April 1st.

1822—Tremendous snow and wind. Easter the last of March, forest trees blown down and torn out by the roots.

1827—Snow fell about a foot deep April 6th.

1833—Sleighbing February 27th, March 21st, only sleighbing during the winter.

1834—Heavy snow April 25-27-May 16, ground frozen 1 inch in depth.

1835—Several inches fell April 12.

1836—Heavy snow October 13th.

1837—Several inches April 17, and again 12 inches April 24th.

1838—Deep snow with high winds; many trees broken down, March 28.

1841—Good sleighbing April 12th, ground frozen May 5th.

1842—Snowed two hours with heavy thunder.

1845—Frost flakes May 31st with killing frost; another heavy frost killing thousands of acres of wheat in Eastern Pennsylvania.

1847—Heavy snow March 25th.

1849—Deep drifting snow April 16.

1851—Three inches of snow May 3rd.

1854—Deep and drifting snow on April 6th. Weather very cold; drifts lasting into May.

1855—Snow fell May 15th and 19th.

1857—April 27 deepest snow that can be remembered so late in the season.

1858—Welsh mountains covered with snow May 20th. Not enough leaves on the trees to make shade on June 1st.

1861—Eight inches of snow May 16.

1862—A foot of snow November 8th.

1868—More than a foot of snow fell March 26th.

1874—Deep snow April 27th.

1884—Heavy snow April 8th.

1888—Blizzard March 10-12; deep drifts everywhere, very cold and much suffering; everything tied up for several days.

1894—Snowing and blowing for 36 hours; eight inches April 10th.

1899—Cold and very deep drifts; traffic tied up; 10 degrees below zero.

Dark Day May 19th, 1780; dark from 9 a. m.; fowls went to roost; dark as night; lights had to be lit and travelers could not proceed.

Falling stars November 13th, 1888, lasting three hours. It seemed as every star from the firmament fell to the earth.

EVENING GOWNS OF DUCHESS OF KENT ARE MOST CHARMING

By Nadia De Beaud
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS — (INS) — It will be many a day before the habits of the honey-moon places of the Duke and Duchess of Kent see all of the gowns in her trousseau.

I have touched the materials and admired the models at Molyneux, the French dress house run by an English army veteran and know them.

The evening gowns are charming. One model was in a pale periwinkle crepe with V-decollete both back and front and two dahlias at the tip in front, one navy blue, the other matching the gown. With this there was a navy blue tulle jacket with very full gathered sleeves of the periwinkle crepe.

Another gown was in peach and silver lame with a crisp brown tulle belt, tied in a bow. A very pretty silver pallfetter belt finished off a pale green crepe gown, the bodice of which was draped high in front.

THIS IS THE SEASON OF BLOUSES, SKIRTS, SAYS MISS ARMSTRONG

By Rhandena A. Armstrong
(Home Economics Representative)

Do you wear a tailored suit, or do you have an "odd" skirt or jumper? You will need a blouse, and never have there been so many designs from which to choose.

The tailored shirtwaist type of blouse is practical and smart. It has long sleeves, a small collar buttoning close up to the neck, and it tucks in at the belt. Made of one of the new dark cotton prints it will fit in well as a color combination with the wool skirt. Rayon or silk print, bright plain silk, or velveteen may be used if preferred. College girls like the very tailored waistcoat blouse.

Perhaps the softer lines will be more becoming. The tailored collar can be changed to a scarf collar with a bit of contrasting color on it and the cuffs. The blouse is hip length, and the skirt for this has softer lines—one of the gored skirts with low fullness.

For a dress-up blouse, choose one of the hip length styles, with long or short sleeves, and with draped front or scarf tie. If the figure is short, use a dark rich color or match the skirt in color but use a different material. For the tall figure the skirt and blouse may show a contrast of color.

The blouse and skirt is another suggestion for remodeling two dresses.

MRS. FRANK J. GOULD COMES TO U. S. TO PURCHASE HOSIERY

By Nadia De Beaud
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS — (INS) — Mrs. Frank J. Gould has returned from a flying visit to America after many years' absence. She went over, as she said, to buy American stockings, and now she is on her way to her home on the Riviera.

At the station Saint Lazare on her arrival she wore an especially smart ensemble of contrasting materials, so much in vogue at present. The dress was in a rough brown wool material with a short pocket of plaid design in the same shade. A brown tyrolean hat with pointed crown and a sharp feather standing up and a bright woolen scarf finished off her traveling outfit.

Mrs. Gould, native of California, who has spent most of 17 years abroad, announced to her friends that she would not desert Europe.

"It has a special charm which cannot be compared to that of America," she said. However, she intends to spend more of her time in the United States henceforth as the result of the purchase of a large estate at Ardley-on-Hudson, several miles from the estate of Mr. Gould's sister, Mrs. Finlay J. Shepard.

She said: "American hospitality is wonderful and the life in the large cities is so gay that I was unable to discern any depression atmosphere."

CAN SURPLUS MEATS FOR YEAR-ROUND USE IS EXCELLENT ADVICE

By Rhandena A. Armstrong
(Home Economics Representative)

These crisp fall days are busy butchering days. Canning meat when butchering is done provides a variety of meat for use throughout the year.

Pork, beef, veal, lamb, mutton, chicken, soup stock, and by-products of butchering, such as sausage, heart, liver and tongue, may be canned when available. All the edible parts can be utilized; nothing need be wasted or eaten just to keep it from spoiling.

Canning meat saves time because it is preparation of food in advance for busy seasons, unexpected guests, and rush days.

Canning meat also saves money because a good supply of meat may be furnished for the table throughout the year from home-grown products.

Canning meat promotes health, for at butchering time there is so much good fresh meat on hand that families may be extravagant and eat so much meat that the diet will be unbalanced. Phone or write the Agricultural Experimental station at Duffield, Pa., for Circular 153, "Canning Vegetables, Fruits and Meats."

Enthusiastic About The Atlantic Winter Motor Oil

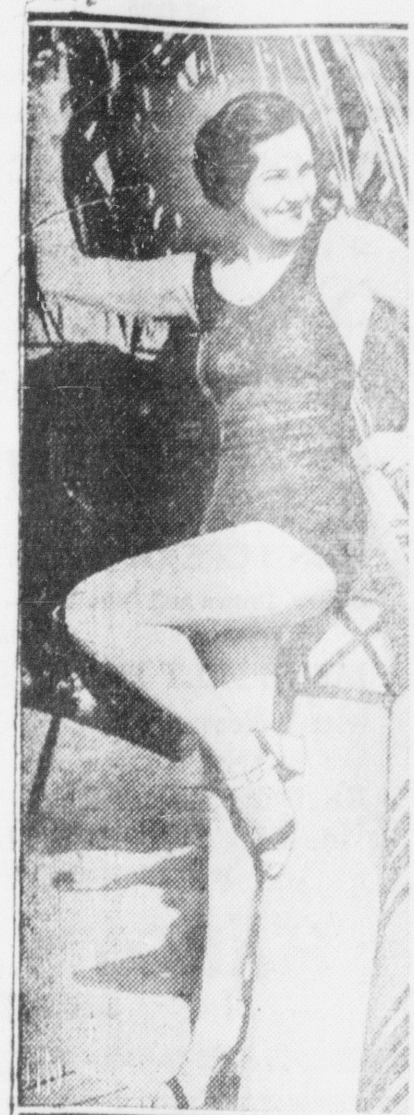

Motorists are unusually enthusiastic about the recently announced Atlantic Motor Oils for Winter, with the new high film-strength, according to Joseph R. Rollins, Director of Publicity of The Atlantic Refining Company. They welcome the fact that these new oils definitely minimize wear, and should mean fewer repair bills for every user.

"Film-strength is something the public in general has heard little about," said Mr. Rollins, "because until very recently the film strength of all oils has remained practically unchanged from the earliest days of the industry. Most motor oil improvements have consisted solely of better ways to refine—in other words, to remove impurities—from the oils. These refining improvements have been extremely important. But in spite of them, automobiles still continued to wear out, which indicated that something else was needed.

"Atlantic's Research Laboratories decided that higher film-strength was this important something. Film-strength is the load-supporting ability of a motor oil; it is the property of an oil which keeps engine surfaces apart and thus prevents wear. The higher the film-strength, the less tendency there is for a motor oil to rupture—and thus allow the metal-to-metal contact which means wear.

"It was a simple thing to desire a higher film-strength; but it was not so simple to get it. Years of research were required. Many methods were attempted and discarded. But at last the goal was achieved. It was not a case of accidentally spilling acid on the floor and making a great scientific discovery through some such haphazard procedure. It was an example of what teamwork can accomplish, when not just one man, but literally scores of them, backed by all the resources of a great organization, bend their ef-

Here at Last

But not transparent, though! It's the cellophane bathing suit, one place, and it's worn by Mrs. J. Howard Gould, Brockton, Mass., so-called, who is wintering at St. Petersburg, Fla. The suit is translucent because it's black.

"We believe that Atlantic's new high film-strength is the greatest improvement in motor oils since the invention of the automobile, because it definitely means less wear for engines and lower upkeep for motorists. The public's whole-hearted acceptance of the new Atlantic Motor Oils confirms us in this belief."

EGG prices have come down sharply in the past week and except when bad weather slows laying, these prices should continue to go even lower. Meat prices have increased, particularly on lamb and beef. Vegetables are plentiful and moderate in price. An amazing variety of them is available—including cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli, Brussels sprouts, kale, spinach, mustard greens, dandelion greens, green beans, carrots, beets, turnips and white-boling onions, to mention only a few. Naval oranges are cheaper than still much higher than other oranges and grapefruit. New crop Florida strawberries have begun to arrive. Here are three menus made from seasonal foods:

RECIPES

COOKIES MAKE THE
HOLIDAY COMPLETE

Christmas Cookies

Almost everyone keeps open house around holiday time and the hostess who wishes to be prepared for the unexpected guest sees to it that the cookie jar is bursting with the delectable trifles that fit in so well with afternoon tea or serve so satisfactorily for an emergency dessert. Here are some new cookie recipes—they are easy to make and nearly all economical—try your hand at them this holiday season.

Chocolate Coconut Cookies

1½ cups flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
¼ cup shortening
1 egg well beaten
3 tablespoons diluted evaporated milk
2 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
1 can shredded cocoanut
Sift the flour before measuring. Add the baking powder, sugar, salt, and sift again. Cut in the shortening. Combine the egg and diluted evaporated milk and add to the flour mixture. Add the melted chocolate. Mix the ingredients thoroughly. Shape into small balls. Roll these balls in shredded cocoanut and flatten slightly. Bake on a greased baking sheet in a hot oven for 10 minutes.

Ginger Nuts

¾ pounds syrup, 1 pound sugar, 1 pound butter, 2½ pounds flour, 1½ ounces ground ginger, 1½ ounces coriander seed, a dash of Cayenne, flour enough to roll out. Cut with a small cookie cutter, form in small balls. Bake in a moderate oven.

Coconut Sticks

2 level tablespoons shortening
1 egg
1 cup milk
2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
Blend shortening and egg yolks. Add milk and dry ingredients. Knead 5 minutes, roll one-half inch thick, cut in 3 inch strips, ¾ inch wide and bake 10 minutes in a moderate oven. Remove from oven and brush with 1 egg white diluted with 2 teaspoons cold water. Roll in grated cocoanut, return to oven and bake until cocoanut is brown.

Butterscotch Brownies

Melt 4 tablespoons butter, add slowly 1 cup brown sugar and cook 2 minutes. Add 1 egg, ¾ cup flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ teaspoon vanilla and ¼ cup broken nut meats. Mix well. Bake in oiled pan. Cut in strips.

Sugar Cookies

½ cup butter
¼ cup milk
7 teaspoon baking powder
1 cup sugar
1 egg
1 teaspoon flavoring
Flour to make a stiff dough.
Mix butter and sugar, add milk and slightly beaten egg. Add flour and work thoroughly. Chill dough. Roll out thin, cut with cookie cutter and bake about 10 minutes in hot oven.

Butterscotch Ice Box Cookies

1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ cups flour
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
1 cup butter
2 cups brown sugar
2 eggs and 1 cup nuts
1 teaspoon cream of tartar.
Cream butter and sugar, add well beaten eggs, the flavoring and then the sifted dry ingredients. Make into a long loaf and let stand in refrigerator until very firm. Slice and bake in a quick oven.

A classified ad will sell that piece of furniture that is no longer needed.

BEHIND the SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

Copyright, 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.
HOLLYWOOD. . . . Even the hardier sportsmen in the film colony are toasting Jack Holt. The Columbia star has introduced bear hunting with bows and arrows astride a horse.

Several weeks ago, Holt, with a party of friends, chartered a boat for San Clemente island, where wild boars still roam.

There is a small stable on the island with sufficient horses for five riders.

Holt supplied the bows and arrows and the party of nimble set out. The hunt was on when a big boar was sighted. The archery that followed would have sent an American Indian into hysterics. Holt was the only member of the party to find the mark. He put two arrows into the neck of the boar and downed his quarry.

The other huntsmen were game and will try again.

Exhibiting another kind of game, Una O'Connor traveled by ambulance from the St. Vincent hospital to the M. G. M. studio, where she is working on scenes in "David Copperfield."

The British character actress is still suffering from two broken ribs and five fractured vertebrae, the result of a fall from a horse.

But because the studio has shot around her as long as it can, she volunteered to make the painful trip and finish her part. She does it sitting in a chair, with a nurse and doctor in constant attendance.

Fortunately, this will fit in with her remaining scenes in the script.

If you can believe Eddie Buzzell, this is a true story.

Just before going to Universal to direct "Transient Lady," the director made a trip into Mexico.

Motoring across the border, he saw a native restaurant with a sign reading: "Portos-Tamales-Enchiladas."

Being a fan of Mexican cooking, Eddie was curious. He knew about tamales and enchiladas, but portos were new to him. So he stopped to find out about them.

"I'd like some of those portos," he told the bright-eyed Mexican waitress.

The girl looked at him in a puzzled manner, went back into the kitchen and presently returned. She said:

"I'm sorry, sir, we cannot give you Portos. He is our father."

Things are not so well with Clara Bow. The red-headed star, who expects her baby next month, has been suffering from insomnia and extreme nervousness. Unknown to most of her friends, she went to a hospital recently for nearly a week. Though back at home now, she has been ordered to see as few visitors as possible and to spend a good deal of the time in bed.

The screen's famous "It" girl will not be moving into a new home soon, after all. Just as an example of how terrified the film people were of the recent election, Clara and Rex Bell held off from building their house until they were sure of Merriam's election as governor.

What two scenario writers (one of them is known as Hollywood's best-dressed author) delighted a night crowd at a popular late spot recently by putting on an acrobatic and tumbling act?

Just to prevent any false impressions, it was only a gag when Zeppo Marx showed up at a late spot wearing red nail polish. . . . Thanks for the letters and calls about who posed for the Indian head on the American penny. Mae West's Philadelphia correspondent was right. It was a little girl named Sarah Longacre. . . . Martin Malone is back from Kansas City where he saw Polly Moran break in her stage act. It's a big hit, both there and in Chicago, he says. Incidentally, if you watch closely enough, you'll see Malone in "The White Parade". He's the chap in the hospital who rushes in and says: "The girl has tried to commit suicide."

Pete Smith, commentator in M. G. M.'s novel short subjects, is ill. . . . The recent Bing Crosby program on the air was written by Ralph Huxton, a member of Paramount's publicity department, and Herman Hoffman, advertising man at the studio.

DID YOU KNOW—That Brian Aherne, an ardent golfer, is so tall he has his golf sticks made with extra long shafts?

CAGE SEASON TO OPEN HERE MONDAY NIGHT

The Bristol A. A. basketball team will open its season Monday night, meeting the Warwick A. C. of Philadelphia, on the Italian Mutual Aid floor. In the first game of the evening, the St. Ann's A. A. basketball quintet will also play a team from the Warwick club.

Bristol A. A. is being managed by "Bill" Clarke and he has picked some of the best players out of the disbanded Bristol Basketball League to represent the borough. In his line-up he has picked the two Frankovic brothers, Joe and Frank, who played with the Paterson Parchment Paper Company; "Toby" Lawrence and "Johnny" Cole, of the Hawks, who won the league championship; "Henny" Morgan, of Third Ward; "Jole" Roe, of the Hibernians; and "Shorty" Riener, who played with the Odd Fellows.

The A. A. will continue to play every Monday night if the receipts of the games warrant and Manager Clarke will attempt to secure the best teams available for the opposition.

Manager Spadaccino of the "Saints" is undecided as to whom will represent his club. He already has "Pete" Bornice, "Bugs" Pico and "Bud" Tullo, besides himself. He will sign up several other local players before the week is out to bolster his line-up.

The Warwick teams are well-known on the basketball courts of Philadelphia and have several former college players in their line-up. They have so many players in their sporting club that they always travel with two teams.

Mrs. Ned Schoonmaker, Fanwood, N. J., spent Monday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Hendricks, 611 Cedar street. Miss Doris Hendricks returned to Fanwood, with Mrs. Schoonmaker, where she is spending a few days.

How It's Done

The super-speed camera of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology catches every movement of a drop kick with Wesley Fesler, assistant coach at Harvard, providing the foot and leather for the demonstration. These remarkable pictures were made at 1/100,000 of a second exposure.
